A Generation of Entitled Children

How many of us (me included) do things for our children because it is easier or it saves the arguments? What we are in fact doing is raising entitled children who do not have the ability to problem solve. Not only that but what we are actually telling our children is that they are not capable of doing things for themselves. Look at the examples below. How many can you tick to say I do that?!

- When their rooms get really messy, we go and do it!
- We do all the laundry, housework and cooking.
- They spill something we wipe it up!
- They are too tired to complete their project so we finish it off

What we are actually saying is:

- You are not capable of doing it yourself.
- You are telling them they are not capable of doing their share and that they are long-term guests
- You do not need to clear up any mess you make.
- When life gets tough you can give up.

There are many age appropriate tasks you can ask your children to do and expect them to do. After all, raising our children to be responsible adults is the job we signed up for.

We wish them well with their new responsibility.

Harvest Festival

We are looking forward to celebrating our school Harvest Festival on Tuesday 16th October. This celebration will take place in church starting at 8:50am. Children are to be taken directly to church that morning unless attending breakfast club as they will be accompanied down to church by staff.

Parents are invited to attend this service and join in our school community celebration. Donations of tinned food will be requested for the day as we will be donating everything collected to the Banbury Food Bank.
